For the people of the then-far-flung British Empire, Alford's 1913 Colonel Bogey March arrived in time to set thousands of young men's feet in motion just before the Great War. The good colonel, however, did not come to the attention of the world at large until 1957, at which point the march became etched in popular memory as the theme from the Oscar-winning motion picture Bridge on the River Kwai.
